

Lower costs, faster insights

When litigation settles before trial, discovery can account for up to 70% of the case spend. Document review is often the largest line item, and as a litigator-led company we know this can cause heartburn and tension in the attorney-client relationship. We have the team, technology, and experience to mitigate spend defensibly. Our team will cut through the vendor-speak to recommend what AI and analytics features are appropriate given your goals and the unique needs of the matter.

Experience and insights for your matters

To protect privilege and ensure a sophisticated understanding of the matter at hand, we engage only U.S.-based and licensed attorneys – we do not outsource or offshore.

Department leadership averages 10+ years of industry experience and holds certifications from multiple review platforms, so we can recommend appropriate analytics, predictive coding, QC, and privilege workflows based upon factors including budget, production deadlines, data types, and more.

Technology agnostic

Our platform-agnostic review team has completed projects in RelativityOne, Reveal, Everlaw, and many other software platforms. Almost half of our engagements are for matters hosted by another eDiscovery vendor or through a client's direct license.

We were early adopters of Technology Assisted Review (TAR) and Continuous Active Learning (CAL) and are currently researching use cases for Generative AI, but we know that sometimes linear review is the best approach. We can explain the nuances of approach in plain language and to ensure you are balancing cost and defensibility.

Finally, we utilize collaboration software to ensure questions are surfaced, answered, and documented to provide you a defensible record of decisions.

Responsive approach

We understand the deadline-driven nature of litigation and investigations, so we ensure our clients have direct relationships with our project managers handling their matters. We do not utilize a client-facing ticketing system, and we provide status updates and reporting based on each client's desired metrics and preferred cadence.

"Thank you so much for partnering with us. It has been very enjoyable to have such reliable, insightful partners."
